Decided Changes.

Thursday, April 6th, is the day set for Mrs. Cornie Watson Baird's millinery opening. The styles in millinery have undergone a decided change since last season, and you must not fail to call and see the elegant line of millinery which Mrs. Baird has purchased for this season.

AMUSEMENTS.

—There's something real good at the Grand to-night. The jolliest, funniest, most laughable comedy ever written, and that is the people's favorite, "Hooligan's Troubles." Something doing all the time from rise of curtain to finish. The best comedians, the greatest dancers, the sweetest singers and up-to-date specialties can be seen in "Hooligan's Troubles." You will laugh, roar and grow fat. Two and a half hours of solid fun. Bring the children; fetch grandpa and grandpa. It will make them healthy and happy and laugh for weeks after they have seen "Hooligan's Troubles." The crazy scarecrow and comical donkey throw an audience into fits of laughter. You can laugh until you cry. "Hooligan" has always been a favorite with the boys and girls. Watch out for Hooligan. He steals everything in sight.

STOCK AND CROP.

—J. J. Yonker shipped his stable of runners to Lexington on Saturday. Mr. Yonker has several promising racers in his string as follows: Dugri, Dr. Kenney and Babe Inglis.

—Joe Hergenrether, of Tippecanoe City, O., who wintered his string of thoroughbreds here, shipped them to Latonia, Saturday, in charge of trainer Newton Jones. Mr. Hergenrether has several good ones in his stable as follows: Dnnmore, Bourbon News, Hearnery, Black Siss.

I know there are cheaper refrigerators than the celebrated North Star, but you would be foolish to buy any other, as the ice saving qualities of the North Star will more than make up the difference in price in one season. J. T. HINTON.

MRS. HALL'S MIRACLE.

Experiences Similar to This Have Occasioned Considerable Comment in Paris.

Few women are better known in Lockport, N. Y., than Mrs. Pattie D. Hall as she belongs to one of the best families and has a large circle of friends and acquaintances. In a recent interview Mrs. Hall said:

"The experience I have been through in the last two years seems like a miracle. I was so badly off that life seemed almost unendurable, and my deafness increased so that I could scarcely hear anything. The suffocation in my chest and the indigestion caused by my catarrh, produced very severe suffering. I had five different physicians, bought everything that anybody recommended to me, but finally gave up in despair.

"One day my miller asked me if I had ever tried Hyomei. I began the treatment, and can thankfully testify that Hyomei does cure this terrible disease. Since using it my hearing has greatly improved, and the only time I have any catarrhal trouble is when I take cold. I then use Hyomei and always get instant relief. My friends and acquaintances marvel at the change in my health and hearing."

Hyomei has made many cures of catarrh, and in connection with Hyomei balm, of catarrhal deafness, in Paris. Similar experiences to that of Mrs. Hall's have created a large sale for Hyomei with Clarke & Co.

The complete outfit, including the inhaler, cost but $1 while extra bottles are but 50 cents. Ask Clarke & Co. to show you the strong guarantee under which they sell Hyomei.

Don't forget the date of Harry Simon's special millinery sale Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 6th, 7th and 8th.

HOLDEN RESIGNS.

The Postal Inspector Admits the Storey Cotton Co. Advanced Him a Loan of $1,100.

CLAIMS THAT HE PAID IT BACK.

The Cotton Company is Defunct, and Most of Its Officers Are Engaged From Justice.

A New York Inspector is in Philadelphia Making an Investigation of Holden's Connection With the Company.

Philadelphia, April 3.—George C. Holden, the inspector in the United States postal service attached to the Philadelphia inspection division, who admitted that the Storey Cotton Co., most of whose officers are fugitives from justice, advanced $1,100 to him as a loan for a few days, has sent his resignation to Washington. Holden declares he received the money and paid it back a few days later without any understanding or agreement with the Storey Cotton Co. that he was to protect the concern against investigation by the post office department. He however admitted that in accepting the loan from that concern he was indiscreet, and thought it best, in view of the revelations in the case, to send his resignation to the postal authorities at Washington.

The discovery that Holden had received a loan from the Storey Cotton Co. was made Thursday, but not made public until Saturday night.

A record of the loan found while Assistant United States District Attorneys Stewart and Swartz, of this city, were making an examination of the books of the defunct concern, for the purpose of getting further evidence against Stanley Francis, who is under arrest charged with being an officer of the Storey concern. Holden was present when the discovery was made. The loan was entered in the general cash book.

"April 29, 1902. When the entry was shown to Holden he was greatly surprised to find that it had been entered on the books. His explanation at the time was that it was a personal loan."

By direction of Postmaster General Cortelyou, Inspector Mayer, of the New York division, has been sent here and is making an investigation of Holden's connection with the Storey Cotton Co.

Holden says that it was a personal loan from F. Ewart Storey, and he believes that the item was placed on the books to do him injury. Since the loan was made, he says, he has sent three separate reports to Washington recommending that fraud orders be issued against the Storey concern.

Almost Surrounded by Forest Fires. Baltimore, April 3.—A series of forest fires in the suburbs almost encircled this city with flames, the territory to the north only being exempt. In several cases there was considerable damage done to handsome estates but no lives were lost.

Used Snow Plows.

Denver, Col., April 3.—The storm which raged in Colorado and a portion of New Mexico for 36 hours has subsided. For the first time this winter the Santa Fe road found it necessary to use snow plows between Pueblo and Colorado Springs.

Dropped Dead on the Street.

Pittsburg, April 3.—Charles E. Gist, superintendent of transportation of the Pittsburg & Lake Erie railroad, while walking with his wife on Ellisworth avenue, dropped dead. Heart disease given as the cause.

Rubber Concern Taken Over.

Akron, O., April 3.—A deal was closed by which the Cincinnati Rubber Manufacturing Co. will take over the rubber manufacturing business of the Whitman & Barnes Manufacturing Co. of Akron and Chicago.

STEPHENS & HENDERSON.

Warrants Issued in Liverpool For the Firm's Arrest.

Liverpool, April 3.—Warrants have been issued for the arrest of A. F. Stephens and A. Henderson, of the firm of Stephens & Henderson, cotton speculators, having offices in New York, Kentucky and Havre. It is believed Stephens is in America. The men are charged with conspiracy with intent to defraud. The firm closed its doors last Thursday.

Louisville, Ky., April 3.—The business of the Louisville office of Stephens & Henderson was brought to the notice of detectives and post office officials as long ago as August 23, 1904. On that date a Fort Worth, Tex., paper published an article declaring that the methods of the firm were questionable and printed copies of blank contracts which it was declared had been spread broadcast among farmers of the southwest by the firm. These contracts invited the persons addressed to entrust their money to the firm of Stephens & Henderson for speculation in the cotton market without specifying as to whether it was to be used to buy for a rise or sell for a decline in futures or spot cotton.

Lester Henderson, local manager, denied that the firm asked unlimited contracts from its customers or that it was attempting to operate a blind pool.

EXPLOSION IN A MINE.

Five Men Killed and Five Seriously Injured at Jerome, Ariz.

Prescott, Ariz., April 3.—As the result of an explosion in the United Verde mine, owned by Senator Clark, five men are dead and five others seriously, but not fatally, injured. The accident happened just as the shifts were being changed and all the men except 12 had been raised to the surface. On account of the recent heavy rains, surface water found its way to that portion of the mine where fire had been smoldering several years and steam thus generated caused the explosion, blowing out the bulkheads, erected to keep the fire from spreading. The men were suffocated by smoke and heated steam.

THE MEAT PACKERS.

The Federal Grand Jury Will Return Indictments.

Chicago, April 3.—Well authenticated reports that the federal grand jury, which is investigating the business methods of the meat packers will return indictments when it reconvenes next Wednesday are prevalent. The report was that the adjournment taken Saturday was really decided upon in order to allow Assistant Attorney General Pagan time to draw up the bills at his leisure since the jury went into session.

DOMESTIC INFELICITY.

John C. Walton Cut His Wife's and His Own Throat.

Pittsburg, April 3.—John C. Walton, after five minutes' conversation with his wife, killed her by cutting her throat with a razor and then, after cutting his own throat, walked to the office of a physician 300 yards distance and expired, just as police officers were about to place him under arrest. There were no witnesses of the crime. Domestic infelicity was the cause of the tragedy. The couple were married about ten years ago and had four children.

Slot Machine Pennies.

Cincinnati, April 3.—The vanishing of the slot machines resulted in starting a tide of pennies into the vaults of the United States treasury. Though that institution was open for but half a day Saturday, nearly 70,000 pennies were poured into its vaults for safe-keeping and for exchange into paper, silver or gold money.

Amnesty To Religious Offenders.

London, April 3.—It is announced, according to a St. Petersburg dispatch to a news agency here, that the committee of ministers has been notified of an imperial decree granting an extensive amnesty to religious offenders.

SERIOUS CONFLICT

Troops Fired on a Jewish Socialist Society Which Had Organized a Demonstration.

THE GATHERING WAS DISPERSED.

Four Men Were Instantly Killed and 40 Wounded Some of Whom Will Die.

The Dead and Wounded Were All Jews—Among the Latter Were Two Women—The Police Made Many Arrests.

Warsaw, April 3.—A serious conflict occurred in Dzikka street, where a Jewish socialist society known as the Bund, had organized a demonstration. The trouble began when, under the pretext of holding a memorial meeting for a late Jewish socialist leader, a crowd of over 1,000, mostly Jews, carrying red flags, marched on Dzikka street and was met by a mixed police and military patrol of 20 men. The police declare the socialists fired revolvers at them, the leaders inciting the mob to attack the patrol, which thereupon fired several volleys into the crowd. Four men were killed and 40 wounded. The crowd removed all but nine of the wounded, two of whom were women. These were taken to the hospital and it is said that two or more of them will die. The dead and wounded were all Jews. The police made many arrests.

Other disturbances are reported to have occurred. The streets had been patrolled throughout the day, the authorities having anticipated trouble. Conditions here are causing much uneasiness and nervousness.

Bombs To Be Thrown.

Hand printed proclamations have been found in the streets, warning the public against walking near government buildings and other places, as bombs would be thrown in these quarters. Several parents whose children are attending school in defiance of the school strike have been warned by letter to withdraw their children, as the school buildings would be blown up.

Representatives of the party of violence (it is not quite clear whether they are revolutionists or socialists) are visiting private persons and levying contributions for "ammunition." They produce lists of names with the amounts to be collected from each and require the contributor to sign his name opposite these assessments, which range from $2.50 to $50. When Gen. Mximovitch arrived here ten days ago to assume his official duties he ordered that the Cossack detachment awaiting him at the station be retired, saying he did not want an escort. Driving through the city Sunday, however, the governor general's carriage was surrounded by 20 Cossacks.

AT THE SEAT OF WAR.

Situation Unchanged in the Changchung and Kirin Directions.

Tokio, April 3.—The following official advices have been received from army headquarters in Manchuria:

"Our scouts advanced toward Hailung and collided with 300 of the enemy's cavalry at Shauciengtz, 30 miles southwest of Seiling on the morning of March 28. The enemy, 4,011 men strong, retreated to Hailung, leaving 2,000 troopers. There are large stores of cereals at various points between Yingcheng and Sanchengtz. Yingcheng is 35 miles north of Hiengcheng. The situation is unchanged in the Changchung and Kirin directions."

SLAVISH CHRISTENING.

It Ended in a Bloody Tragedy Near Latrobe, Pa.

Latrobe, Pa., April 3.—A Slavish christening ended in a tragedy at Jamison mine No. 2, four miles from Latrobe. Mike Kalifoski is dead and several other men are reported to be seriously injured. The festivities started at the home of John Borek. The supply of liquor was nearly exhausted and the question of an added supply, it is said, started a fight which ended in a general riot. Kalifoski was shot through the lungs, dying almost instantly.

Maxim Gorky's Trial.

St. Petersburg, April 3.—The trial of Maxim Gorky on the charge of drawing up proclamations with the object of overthrowing the existing state of affairs in the empire and disturbing public order has been postponed until May 16.

Russians Destroying the Railroad. Tokio, April 3.—Reports from Manchuria show that the Russians are destroying the railway much more thoroughly than hitherto. The evident inference is that they do not contemplate recovering the situation.

Shorter Hours and More Wages. St. Petersburg, April 3.—Reports from many places throughout Russia, including Tver, Borissoff and Sistrum show that employees of warehouses and shoes are again demanding shorter hours and more wages.

A Battle Anniversary. Mexico City, Mex., April 3.—The anniversary of the battle of Puebla was celebrated by a military review in this city, the troops passing before President Diaz and staff and a number of high officials.

STOP! WOMEN,

AND CONSIDER THE ALL-IMPORTANT FACT

That in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with woman's diseases covers a great many years. You can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate your private troubles to a man—besides a man does not understand—simply because he is a man.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing full well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty impels them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probably examinations of even their family physician. It is unnecessary. Without money or price you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good-will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. — Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Following we publish two letters from a woman who accepted this invitation. Note the result.

First letter.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—For eight years I have suffered something terrible every month with my periods. The pains are excruciating and I can hardly stand them. My doctor says I have ovarian and womb trouble, and I must go through an operation if I want to get well. I do not want to submit to it if I can possibly help it. Please tell me what to do. I hope you can relieve me."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, 50th and E. Capitol Sts., Benning P.O., Washington, D.C.

Second letter.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—After following carefully your advice, and taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I am very anxious to send you my testimonial, that others may know their value and what you have done for me."

Board Bill and Billboard.

Bill had a billboard. Bill also had a board bill. The board bill bored Bill so that Bill sold the billboard to pay his board bill. So after Bill sold his billboard to pay his board bill the board bill no longer bored Bill.—Yale Expositor.

Unfortunately, there are men in this world who complain bitterly at having to pay 15 cents a gallon for kerosene, but who seem to be perfectly willing to pay 15 cents a glass for whisky.—Boston Globe.

"Be not overanxious to convert thy friend from that which thou deemest the error of his thought to that which may be the error of thine own."—Boston Budget.

The pessimist thinks the world is worse than it really is, and the optimist thinks it is better—and both are wrong.—N. Y. Times.

What Everybody Says.

Jamboree, Ky., April 3rd.—(Special)—"I suffered for years with my back," says Mr. J. M. Coleman, a well-known resident of this place. "Then I used Dodd's Kidney Pills and I have not felt a pain since. My little girl complained of her back. She used about one-half box of Dodd's Kidney Pills and she is sound and well."

It is thousands of statements like the above that show Dodd's Kidney Pills to be the one cure for Backache or any other complaint of deranged kidneys. For Backache is simply a sign that the kidneys need help.

Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure Backache. They also always cure Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy, Rheumatism, Bladder and Urinary Troubles and Head Disease. These are more advanced stages of kidney disease. Cure your Backache with Dodd's Kidney Pills and you need never fear them.

Those who boast much of their ancestry are not keeping up the average of posterity.—The Commoner.

Stop Suffering Like That!

Why don't you use Pusheck's Kuro and be well. It positively cures Rheumatism, Pain, Weakness, Mises, Indigestion, Catarrh and all Blood and Nerve Diseases. This is the best Remedy ever offered to the public; no other like it; it cures when everything else has failed. Most Druggists keep it, price, $1.00, sent for that price to any address by Dr. Pusheck, Chicago.

It's an ill-wind that blows anybody good, but you.—N. Y. Times.

A Guaranteed Cure for Piles.

Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles. Your Druggist will refund money if Pazo Ointment fails to cure in 6 to 14 days. 50c.

There are no wyes in the empty sheepfold.—Chicago Tribune.

SICK HEADACHE

Positively cured by these Little Pills. They also relieve Distress from Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Too Hearty Eating. A perfect remedy for Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Coated Tongue, Pain in the Side, TORPID LIVER, etc. SMALL PILL. SMALL DOSE. SMALL PRICE.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS. Genuine Must Bear Fac-Simile Signature. REFUSE SUBSTITUTES.

"As you know, I wrote you that my doctor said I must have an operation or I could not live. I then wrote you, telling you my ailments. I followed your advice and am entirely well. I can walk miles without an ache or a pain, and I owe my life to you and to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I wish every suffering woman would read this testimonial and realize the value of writing to you and your remedy."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, 50th and E. Capitol Streets, Benning P.O., Washington, D.C.

When a medicine has been successful in restoring to health so many women whose testimony is so unquestionable, you cannot well say, without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." If you are ill, don't hesitate to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once, and write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for special advice—it is free and always helpful.

International Courtesies.

Our war office has at last decided to arm the artillery. The new guns, it is said, are to be ready within two years, and we understand that a polite message has been sent to all the other powers requesting them not to make war on us in the interim.—London Punch.

Edelstein, Ill. Pusheck's Kuro helped me and I am better now than I have been for a long time. Paris, Logan Co., Ark.

We are very well pleased with Pusheck's Kuro, and together with others who were cured by it, join in praising its merits. We only regret all the money we spent without results until we used this remedy. Mrs. Marie Klager.

PRESIDENT'S TRIP.

The Executive Leaves the Capital For His Outing in the West and Southwest.

TO BE ABSENT ABOUT TWO MONTHS

Will Attend the Reunion of the Rough Rider Regiment of the Spanish War.

After This Event Roosevelt Is To Go Hunting in the Pan-Handle District of Texas and Later in Colorado.

Washington, April 3.—President Roosevelt left here Monday morning on a long trip to the west and southwest and will be absent from the capital for nearly two months. One of the chief objects of the trip, which the president long has had in mind, is the reunion of the Rough Rider regiment of the Spanish war, which is to take place at San Antonio, Tex., next Friday, and for which an elaborate program of exercises has been arranged. There will be several brief stops, where the president will make addresses on the way to San Antonio. After leaving San Antonio there will be a brief stop and address at Fort Worth, which will end the public part of the trip, after which the president is to go hunting in the pan-handle of Texas and later in Colorado. All arrangements have been made whereby the president will keep in touch with public affairs both during his railroad ride and while hunting, so that he will be enabled to pass on all matters requiring his attention.

The Itinerary.

The president left Washington at 9 a. m. He is accompanied by Secretary Loeb, Dr. Alexander Lambert, Gen. S. B. M. Young, Lieut. G. R. Fortescue, M. C. Latta and J. L. McGrew, stenographers and representatives of newspaper press association.

The first stop will be made at Louisville, Ky., at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. The president and party will pass in procession through the city and the president will make an address. The train will leave Louisville at 11 o'clock, pass through St. Louis at 8 p. m. and at that point take the Missouri, Kansas & Texas road for San Antonio. A few stops will be made in Indian Territory on Wednesday. At Sherman, Tex., where the party will arrive at 4 p. m., the president will leave the train, drive to the public square and make a brief address. Dallas will be reached at 6:30 p. m. and after a public address the president will attend a dinner. The next stop will be at Waco Thursday April 6 at 9:30 a. m.

Will Address the Texas Legislature.

The president will speak briefly at Waco. He will reach Austin at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon, address the joint session of the legislature at the capitol and later speak to the public on the lawn of the capitol. The train will reach San Antonio at 8:30 p. m. Thursday, but there will be no public program until the following morning. The object of the president in visiting San Antonio is to attend the reunion of his regiment. Exercises have been arranged which will fill the entire day, including a review of the regular troops at Fort Sam Houston, a procession in which the grand army and confederate veterans will take part, luncheon at the Rough Riders camp, and a dinner by the business men's club at Hotel Menger. The president will leave at 11 p. m. for Fort Worth, arriving there the next morning at 9:45 and leaving at 10:45. The program for Fort Worth will consist of a drive and an address.

STABBED BY A GIRL.

Jennie Good Plunged a Knife Into the Breast of R. W. Kline.

Lancaster, Pa., April 3.—Ralph W. Kline, 26, an artist, was fatally stabbed by Jennie Good, 18. Kline and Miss Good were members of a party who were fishing near Long Park. Kline and the girl had a quarrel, during which Miss Good threatened to cut out his heart. Thinking that she would not execute her threat, Kline threw out his chest and told her to stab. She did, plunging a knife into his breast, near the heart. He is at a hospital unconscious. The girl fled and has not yet been arrested.

President's Present.

Tangier, April 3.—American Minister Cummer, on behalf of President Roosevelt, has presented to Mulai Ali and Mulai Hamed, sheikhs of Wazon, with handsomely inscribed rifles in recognition of their services in the Perdicaris affair.

Secretary Hay's Health Improved. Naples, April 3.—The White Star line steamship Cretic, with Secretary of State John Hay and Mrs. Hay on board, arrived here after a pleasant voyage. Mr. Hay declares that his health has been greatly improved.

Four Killed in a Wreck. Branchville, S. C., April 3.—As a result of a serious wreck on this division of the Southern railway, a few miles below Branchville, near a small lumber station called Badham, four persons are dead.

Nebraska Legislature Adjourns. Lincoln, Neb., April 3.—The legislature adjourned sine die at midnight, after sending to the governor the Junk anti-trust bill and the bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

REJECT NAVAL APPLICANTS.

More Are Dismissed Because of Bad Teeth Than for Any Other Reason.

Washington.—Reports to the navy department from recruiting parties at various points in the United States show that of all the applicants for enlistment two-thirds are rejected because of physical deficiencies. The naval requirements are for sound and healthy young men. More are rejected because of bad teeth than for any other reason.

Naval surgeons hold that a man who has lost a majority of his molars cannot properly masticate his food. He is, therefore, susceptible to stomach trouble and the disorders of the digestive organs. His efficiency as a working machine is thus impaired. The surgeons consider a man with one upper and one lower molar on one side much better off for the naval service than a man who has lost all his upper molars but whose lower molars remain sound.

The food question aboard ship is one of great importance. If it does not agree with the bluejacket they are quick to complain. There are no dental surgeons regularly rated in the United States navy, although some hospital stewards do dental work. There is a regular dentist on the receiving ship Hancock.

The authorized limit of the enlisted personnel of the navy is now 34,000. It is hoped at the bureau of navigation that the full number will be recruited by July 1.

ILLUMINATED BALL LATEST.

Phenomenal Sphere Can Be Used to Play Golf on the Darkest Nights.

New York.—A genius in this city has invented an aluminum golf ball. This is expected to revolutionize this popular game.

The composition of the ball is kept secret. A certain amount of phosphorus mixed with some other chemical gives it a peculiar and brilliant glow. The ball is claimed to have all the properties of the regulation one.

The unique feature lies in the fact that with the new invention golf can be played at night as well as when the sun is shining. Wherever it drops it can be seen by the light it throws out. When playing at night lanterns are placed on the different greens. In driving the course of the ball can be seen through the air.

Another advantage is that when the new ball is played in daytime games, and is lost, at night it can readily be found by the glow it gives out.

BOTTLES MADE OF PAPER.

They Are Lighter Than Glass and Can Not Be Refilled—Opening Destroys Them.

Houston.—Negotiations are pending to secure for this city a plant to manufacture paper bottles.

The bottle is made from paper pulp, is non-refillable and much lighter than glass. It is claimed to be proof against infection on account of the fact that it is hermetically sealed when filled and the neck of the bottle must be cut off to open it. The bottle is filled in by automatic machinery and then crimped in and sealed automatically. The bottle is non-refillable from the fact that it is destroyed or so defaced when opened that it cannot be used again.

Special automatic machinery is required for making the bottles. And one of these machines will make 1,000,000 bottles a week. The machine will cost $2,000. Special machinery will be used to close the bottles when filled.

Hargis Trials Begins To-day.

The Hargis trials begin this morning at Lexington before Judge Watts Parker.

Col. John R. Allen, Commonwealth's Attorney, A. F. Byrd and B. F. Jouett, of Winchester, are the attorneys for the prosecution.

The attorneys for the defense are Judge J. R. Morton, Geo. C. Webb and Samuel M. Wilson, of the firm of Morton, Webb & Wilson; George R. Hunt, E. P. Farrell and C. W. Miller, all of Lexington; Judge J. C. Bach and O. H. Pollard, of Jackson, and John R. Lee, of Lynchburg, Va.

Walkover for Stout.

Judge Ira Julian Friday afternoon announced his withdrawal from the race for Democratic nomination for Circuit Judge in the Fourteenth district, composing the counties of Franklin, Scott, Bourbon and Woodford, leaving Judge Robt. L. Stout, of Woodford, a clear field for the nomination. The primary will be called off an expense money returned to the candidates. Judge Stout will be declared the nominee.

—OF—

Horses, Buggies and Household Goods.

Mrs. Rogers' death necessitates me changing homes and this change causes a change in my future plans.

At Mrs. Rogers' residence, on Main street, Paris, Ky., beginning at 1 p. m., sharp, on Saturday, May 8, 1905,

I will sell my little sorrel family mare, so well known by Paris and Bourbon county people, that I don't need to tell you what a treasure she is.

One strictly nice combined bay 4-year-old horse.

You will have a chance to buy at your own bids the twenty-years accumulation of a beautiful housekeeper—four sets of furniture, four wardrobes, 3 dozen chairs, four nice rockers and one parlor set, four nice rarpets, one piano, two extension tables, two sideboards, one cooking stove and utensels, two nice stoves for hall and bed room, four feather beds, pillows and bolsters, eight pairs of nice blankets, two dozen nice comforts and quilts, about as many sheets, a number of nice napkins and table cloths, preserves and canned fruits, and many other things not mentioned.

TERMS—Twenty dollars and under, cash; over, four months with bankable paper, bearing 6 per cent. interest.

Then on

May 1, being Court Day, in front of the Court House, at 10 a. m., I will sell my farm on Jackstown road, and will be sold in two separate tracks. Forty acres lying North of the pike, has a two-room stone house and good meat house, and is all in grass.

Containing 100 Acres,

Sixty acres just across the pike. This has no improvements. This is a chance to buy two good tracts of land.

I have a life interest in the land adjoining this land and will go into a written contract for a 5-year lease with the buyer of the above land, payable annually, and make one-half of the division fence at any time. The land being rented for this year, I will make the notes for the deferred payments to begin bearing March 1, 1906.

Will sell the land one-third cash, balance on one and two years payment.

No Decision Reached.

The jury in the lunacy trial of Mrs. Inogene Holmes Lyle, in the Circuit Court at Danville, failed to reach an agreement, and was discharged. The case was bitterly fought. Another trial will be held at once. The jury stood ten for conviction and two for acquittal.

Ice Cream Season Here.

Seriously Wounded.

Shortly after 6 o'clock, Saturday evening a dispute arose between two negroes, Charley Rice, of this city, and Ben Benton, of Lexington, in James Connelly's saloon on Main street, concerning the ownership of a quarter. From words, the disputants came to blows and in the mix-up Rice received a knock-out blow. Arising, he drew his gun and fired one shot at Benton, which went wide of its mark striking Jim Thompson, colored, an innocent bystander.

The shot took effect just over the left eye. Thompson was hurriedly removed to the office of Drs. Kenney & Dudley, where his wound was dressed, and later sent to the Good Samaritan hospital at Lexington to be operated on.

Let's Turn It Over To The Ladies.

It seems that all efforts to resuscitate the Paris Commercial Club are in vain. About six years ago we had a meeting and organized, electing officers and collecting about $300 in dues. Since that meeting no effort has ever been made toward securing industries for this city; no inducements ever offered to capitalists to locate here—in fact, nothing has been done by this "enterprising" organization. Georgetown, Winchester, Maxville and Lexington all have Business Men's Clubs, and grab at everything that will in any way benefit their cities.

If there is no possible chance of reviving this organization, let's turn the cash on hand and the minutes of the first and only meeting over to the ladies of Paris, who have proven that they are more capable as a business set to manage a Commercial Club than the men of our city.

Through the untiring efforts of our business women we have in the last few years built in Paris the new Christian Church, Methodist Church, Carnegie Library, Presbyterian parsonage, green house in cemetery, vault in cemetery, wire waste baskets on the streets, they were also instrumental in building of sidewalks on Cypress street, and if they are encouraged a little, will in a short time build an up-to-date hospital, having already raised about $8,000. The Junior Hospital Club, composed of young ladies, will on Friday night give a large euchre party at the Elks' Home. The proceeds will be used to buy a site for the hospital. The admission will be 75 cents, and every mother's son in Paris should buy a ticket.

If the defunct Commercial Club won't wake up and get busy, let's at least encourage the ladies in their efforts to make Paris a city.

Circuit Court.

In the Circuit Court Friday, the evidence and arguments of the attorneys in the Walls will case was finished and submitted to the jury at 5:30 p. m. They were unable to agree, and at 6 p. m. excused until Saturday morning at 9 o'clock, when they further deliberated. Four speeches were made in the case, Robert C. Talbott opening the argument of the contestants. He was followed by Hon. E. M. Dickson for the propounders. Hon. Robert B. Franklin closed for the contestants, which was an eloquent plea for his clients. Hon. C. J. Bronston closed the argument for sustaining the will.

Court reconvened Saturday morning at 9 o'clock and the jury brought in a verdict sustaining the will.

Council for the contestants filed an application for a new trial, which goes over unacted upon.

Ed. Stewart, colored, charged with shooting with intent to kill, was tried and acquitted.

All cases on the criminal docket were continued.

The names of talesman from which the juries will be selected to serve at the June term of the court were drawn from the jury wheel.

The prisoners, all colored, convicted during the term were ordered brought into court and sentences passed as follows: Richard Bedinger 5 years, William Williams 2 years, Troy Lytle 1 year.

Court then adjourned to court in course.

Judge Robt. L. Stout returned to his home after the adjournment. He made a most favorable impression as a fair, impartial and able jurist, and as an agreeable, polished and courtly gentleman.

Five New Rural Routes.

Postmaster J. L. Earlywine received notification from the Postoffice Department yesterday that five additional routes would be established in this county to go into effect May 1st; three from the Paris postoffice, one from North Middletown and one from Hutchison. The new carriers receive $720 per annum, including horse hire.

Postmaster Earlywine has worked earnestly and persistently to secure this additional service and deserves much credit for his efforts.

The entire county will now have a postal service that will reach all of her citizens and be as perfect as it is possible to make it. The star route service from Paris to North Middletown, Plum to Paris and Clintonville to Austerlitz will be discontinued on after May 1st. The locked pouch for North Middletown will be carried by Rural Carrier No. 2, and the pouch returned by Rural Carrier No. 1. Rural Carrier No. 3 will perform the same service for Little Rock, and Carrier No. 9 will perform like service from Clintonville.

The Iron Brigade

A STORY OF THE ARMY
OF THE POTOMAC

By GEN. CHARLES KING
Author of "Norman Holt," "The Colonel's Daughter," "Fort Payne," etc.

Copyright, 1902, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

Four o'clock, and still the batteries of Hall and Stewart, with three hard-pounded brigades, hold their ground on the ridge, while the valley behind them is fast filling with Ewell's madly exultant men, driving Howard's beaten divisions before them. To hang on longer is simply madness. Beginning at the right, therefore, stern and silent, the devoted brigades give ground slowly, still facing the foe, still firing low and well. The crush comes as the streams of wounded thicken at the outskirts of the town, merging with the fugitives of the Eleventh corps, and the roads and streets are blocked by batteries, ambulances, stray caissons and ammunition wagons, all in full retreat. The pinch of the fight, the crowning hour of the day, the bloodiest battle of all the 40 hours of thrilling combat, is here on the slope to the north of the seminary, where, from the teeth of the foe, from the midst of their slaughtered horses, the men of the west essay to drag and save their pets, their comrades in every fight and field, the black-mouthed, smoking, heated, still thundering guns of battery "B."

Davis and Daniel—two fighting southern brigadiers they are riding madly among their powder-stained men; driving them on in the face of those stubborn wild westerners; pointing their swords at the crippled guns, where men are straining at the wheels and slashing at the harness of the slaughtered horses. "Get those guns!" shriek the leaders. "Square accounts for the battle-flags lost in the cut!" But, between the surging rush of Carolina, Mississippi and Georgia, with the supporting Virginians at their back, and that battle-scarred battery limping slowly away down the pike, there still interposes that stern, indomitable, magnificent line in blue—all that is left of the Iron Brigade—as, front to the foe, closing ever on its colors, volleys steadily, defiantly, unflinchingly into the very face of its outnumbering, yet respectful, pursuers, it backs away over the ridge, leaving over a third of its membership strewn in its tracks, another third having already been borne bleeding away toward the town, and so, as the sun goes down on the tremendous day, so slowly, steadily, wrapped in clouds of its own battle smoke, the eastern brigade descends to the plain, the Sixth last to halt in the streets of the town and to cheer to the echo the cause of the flag, while the guns once more unlimber, on the rise of Cemetery Hill, as though daring the foemen to come on and take them. No wonder the Badgers grip hands with the Wolverines, they that remain. Almost 500 of the Michigan men went into the fight by the side of the veterans. Only 100 are left in line when at last the day is done. Fully 300 have been shot down on the field; some few have been captured. In officers alone their dead outnumber those of the rest of the brigade. Of the Black Hats surviving there stand now but 70.

"And they might have cut you off entirely," says Doubleday, as he rides among the remnants, halting along the wooded hillside, east of their rescued guns. "Buford saw, what you couldn't see through the smoke, that two brigades were sweeping down south of the seminary to intercept you. He formed his squadrons to charge. They saw it, by jove! and halted and formed squares to resist him, and that saved you. Capt. Benton, I wish you would ride over and present my compliments and thanks to Gen. Buford. He's just moving off past that stone farm house yonder down in the valley." And so ended the day.

CHAPTER XXV.

LADY'S LAST RETREAT.

In the two great days that followed there was little to do for the little left of the Iron Brigade. Sore-hearted over the loss of so many cherished comrades, yet confident that their valor had not been vain, the survivors hung silently to their assigned position, and awaited developments.

And, when the morrow came, Benton was early in saddle and away to the left of the line. He was bitter and chafed in spirit over his wrongs. He realized that under existing conditions nothing more than half-hearted acknowledgment of error could be looked for, but he had determined that the moment things settled down and the department had time to attend to something besides the momentous affairs of the nation, he would demand justice. And now both Wadsworth and Doubleday had spoken in heartiest praise of his behavior throughout that heroic battle of the first day. So far so good. What he longed for, on one hand, was a chance to square accounts with McKinnon. What he hoped for, on another, was opportunity to teach that disdainful girl how deeply she had wronged, as well as affronted, him.

He would have known better had he had time to analyze the chagrin and pain and jealousy which possessed him all the long hours that followed his morning talk with some staff comrades of the Second corps. It seems that three days before, on the 29th of June, while they of the Second were pushing cautiously northward through Maryland, they were made aware that a column of cavalry was passing around them from the south, and that while they were swinging through Uniontown the cavalry were trotting through Westminster, only five miles from their flank. "Gregg's division, of course," said they who saw through glasses the far-distant column. "Gregg, not much!" said Haskell, who had ridden out toward Union Mills on a scout of his own. "It's Jeb Stuart with his whole outfit and not a little of ours. He must have been helping himself every mile of his way from the Potomac." And this, indeed, proved to be the case; for, as they lay in the fields about Uniontown that night, there reached them a rueful, crest-fallen little party of officers, gathered in by Stuart at the crossing of the Baltimore pike. Two were field officers who from convalescent hospital were striving to overtake their regiments; the third was Maj. McKinnon, ordered to report without delay to the commanding general, Army of the Potomac; and McKinnon, it seems, had also been convalescing in Baltimore, but not from wounds. These three, with their light luggage, had been pounced upon at a wayside tavern by a roistering troop of Stuart's flankers and dragged before this cavalry commander. One of the parties presented the three captured officers. Stuart invited his captives to be seated while an aide took their names, regiments, etc., and as McKinnon gave his there was sudden sensation. The young cavalryman sprang forward, seized McKinnon's hand, shook it effusively, and to the amazement of every present, exclaimed: "Gen. Stuart, I am sure, sir, you will treat this gentleman with every possible consideration. It was he, sir, who so nobly defended my father at Washington when Secretary Stanton would have sent him to Fort Warren—and Rosalie, too, for that matter. It was Maj. McKinnon, sir, who pleaded their cause with the secretary and had them returned to Charlottesville. It was he, sir, who in other ways most generously aided them."

LADY'S LAST WORDS.

LADY'S LAST WORDS.

"I am glad to hear it, Jack," said the bearded general, evidently warming toward the westerner who had so befriended his kith and kin. "Of course you're—sure of it?" "Sure of it, sir?—I had it from father and Rosalie both! They had supposed that they were indebted—or rather that their helper was a very different person, a man whom they had befriended; but that all turned out to be an error." And the upshot of it all was, said Haskell, "that Stuart sent the three to our lines, the two other officers paroled until exchanged, but McKinnon, by Jove, released with Stuart's compliments, and it's my candid belief, damn him, that Mac would a heap rather be in Washington on parole than out here on duty. Shouldn't wonder if Stuart took his measure before he let him slide." Manifestly Haskell didn't fancy McKinnon.

One thing for Benton to ponder over, therefore, was the question how on earth had McKinnon in so short a time been able to persuade that usually clear-sighted girl to the belief that he had used such powerful influence in their behalf.

But there was still another thing to add to his chagrin and perplexity. Col. Kennard, one of the paroled pair, told Haskell all he had seen of Stuart and his devil-may-care command, and much about this young confederate officer—Chilton. "Because," said Kennard, "I heard Chilton say to McKinnon he was praying that he might yet meet Capt. Benton. There was a union man he'd shoot on sight! And Winston said Amen!" "Now, Fred," said Haskell, as he called for his horse, "I've got to ride the lines and get the reports; but, we've got McKinnon up with the army at last, and soon as we're through with this business we'll nail him." But evidently it was business first in Haskell's eyes.

So Fred Benton had two burning desires as he threaded his way through the swarm of arriving batteries and rode slowly back to Wadsworth; one was to meet McKinnon and brand him as the author of the slanders and the other was in some way to wring from Chilton an explanation of his violent threat. Little did he dream how soon he should be spared the need—and through what sad, strange circumstance.

Between the twilight of the second of July that witnessed Ewell's bloody assault and the dawning of that black Friday of the Lost Cause—the third day—something had happened to give new heart to Jackson's old men. The "Stonewall" brigade was there still in the woods in the low ground between the rocky point, where crouched the survivors of Wadsworth's division, and the forest-covered heights off to the eastward, where cavalry guidons—union cavalry—had been flashing in the last rays of the setting sun. Somewhere in the dim fields there was stir and excitement even in the wearied bivouacs of Ewell; and, under the starlight, eager to satisfy his general's restless desire to know what it all meant, Fred Benton had crept out to the front.

The word had gone the rounds, to the joy of every soldier heart, that the new commander meant to stand and fight, and if Lee could muster no more men than these already thrown in, he might hammer the lines in vain. Now, if only Stuart and his pet brigades would but stay lost, so that no fear need be felt for the far right flank, all would indeed be well!

But would Stuart stay lost? Could he have got so far away as not to be found and by this time returned to the army; and when he came, would it not be from the north, and thus bring him in on the very flank they were now defending? Tired as he was Benton could not sleep for thinking of the disclosures made through Haskell.

Alone and afoot, after a word with his gray-haired chief, he slipped out and away to the Baltimore pike. This he followed southeasterly nearly half a mile, greeted occasionally by low-toned challenge of sentry; but other officers were hurrying swiftly to and fro, and there was little detention. As early as three o'clock he found himself following a patrol down a rocky pathway toward the creek, and, learning from outlying sentry there that no force seemed to be in his immediate front—only a few pickets—Benton explained that he wished to crawl out far enough to be beyond the sound of trampling hoof and rumbling wheel at the pike, that he might listen the better. And, creeping from bush to bush to avoid the moonlit spaces, less than half an hour before dawn he had succeeded in gaining fully 400 yards out toward the northeast, and there low voices warned him to lie still and listen. He was either on or within the confederate picket line, and had much to learn and little time.

And then, as he crouched close to the trunk of a spreading tree, faint and sweet, soft yet stirring, so far out to the north that the performer doubtless thought it beyond the range of inimical ears, a cavalry trumpet began to sound the martial reveille, stirring some nearby watcher to remonstrance. "Damn that infernal dash-dashed idiot," stormed a low, half-choked voice. "He'll tell the whole dash-dashed Yankee army our fellows have come! Go back there, sergeant, and tell our trumpeter if he dares to toot a horn I'll murder him."

Then somebody rustled off through the bushes, and somebody else spoke. "Some of Hampton's crowd, I reckon. How long'd the general want us to stay out hyuh?"

"Till Ewell attacks at dawn. Then we'll mount and look out for Gregg. His people are out here to the east of us. Stuart'll get after them, you bet, as soon as it's light."

"We haven't got a horse that can more'n stagger. All worn out, I tell you," protested the second voice. "No more'n theirs are. Jennings met us back there on the Hanover pike, and I heard him tell Fitz Lee Gregg's horses were all played out—"

"Jennings be damned!" broke in a third voice, impetuously, and Benton started at the sound. It was Chilton's beyond shadow of a doubt. Chilton again with his old regiment, and these with him were doubtless officers of Fitz Lee's brigade, scouting, probably, well in front of the cavalry lines, yet proving that Stuart was there at last, and could be counted on to make things lively in the morning. It was high time to slip back and give warning, but getting back was slow and tedious—even perilous work. The dawn was breaking when, in bedraggled gear, Benton found his gray-headed general in the circle about the commander. Before Benton had time to whisper half his explanation, Wadsworth's tired eyes flamed with eager light.

"Here's the very news to prove it, general!" he cried. "Capt. Benton, of my staff, is just in from that front. Stuart is there and Ewell means to attack—"

"How do you know Stuart is there?" demanded Meade, whirling sharply on the young officer. The most courteous and polished of gentlemen at other times, Meade was irascible in the extreme in battle. "I heard voices, sir—one that I well knew, an officer of the First Virginia—heard them say that Fitz Lee was there, and that Stuart would make

Gregg, and that Ewell would attack at dawn—"

But even as he spoke came confirmation of his words. In the dim light of the dawn, the guns of Greene and Geary had suddenly opened on shadowy gray lines, issuing from the opposite woods, and Wadsworth sprang for his horse. But the commander signalled Benton to remain. "You have done a gallant deed, captain, and have brought me most valuable information," were his words a moment later; "It shall not be forgotten."

Yet Benton was surprised late that afternoon when, after the din of the most terrific cannonade ever heard on this continent, and, after daring and determined attack, Pickett, Ewell and Stuart all had been repulsed—Pickett with dreadful loss—there came a message summoning the aide-de-camp to Meade's headquarters. An orderly led him toward a rude wagon-shed beneath which knelt four officers, surrounding a prostrate figure. "He asked for you," said a surgeon, briefly, and one glance at the face of the stricken soldier was enough. Benton threw himself on his knees, and clasped the cold, nerveless hand, feebly lifted to greet him. The falling eyes lighted up one moment in love then closed in agony, as a spasm of torment seized the fragile form. "Paul—Paul—my God!" was all that Benton could murmur, and a surgeon hurriedly brushed before him and held a little silver cup to the twitching lips of his patient. "Mortal, yes," was his whisper, as the poor lad, exhausted, lay for a moment in a deathlike swoon. Then the stimulant seemed to revive him a bit. The dark eyes slowly opened and fixed on Benton's quivering face. "Bless you, old boy!"—and every whisper seemed to come with a gasp—"I heard—I knew—you'd never give up her letters. Where's McKinnon?" And here the poor lad seemed drifting away again. Benton thrust his left arm under the fallen head and strove to raise it, while once more the surgeon placed the cup to the parted lips; and, noting the name, a staff officer turned quickly and said a word to a waiting soldier. It was another minute before the swooning lad reopened his eyes. Two other forms had joined the silent group. Benton saw nothing but the loved face. Then some one, well meaning, bent and questioned: "You asked for Maj. McKinnon. Did you wish to speak—"

"McKinnon!" whispered Paul. "McKinnon?" and now a shudder seemed to seize the wasting form. "Tell him for me I know he stole my letters. Tell him I told Rosalie—every word he said of you was a cowardly lie."

And not until the dead hand in his was cold and stiffening did Benton know what caused the strange movement and sensation in that group as Ladue's last words were spoken. Almost inaudible, they had reached the straining ears of four who bent to listen, and of one who, standing, would gladly have been deaf to them.

William Dean Howells was at Oxford, where an honorary degree had been conferred upon him. He was walking down the High street with an aged fellow of Brasenose college, relates an exchange. The talk turned to the passing of one literary school and the rise of another, and the Oxford man said:

"I am reminded of an old clergyman I used to know in Woodstock. 'He was very old. The only person in his parish of equal age with him was a tailor and the tailor and he were great friends. They often called on one another.'

"Well, one evening the clergyman sat in the tailor's shop. He was quiet and thoughtful. He gazed into the fire in silence for a long time. Finally he said with a sigh:

"James, I can't tell why it is that our congregation is getting smaller and smaller. I am sure I preach as well as I ever did, and I must have gathered a great deal of wisdom and experience since I first came among you."

"Ah, sir," said the tailor sadly, 'old parsons, nowadays, are like old tailors. I am sure I sew as well as ever I did, and my cloth is the same, or better; but it's the cut—the new cut—that beats me.'"

Besides bridesmaids there are brides-men, these latter being obliged to present the bridesmaids with sweetmeats. A personage follows the procession bearing an elegantly mounted picture of Christ in gold and silver, which is stationed against the altar. The bridesmaids do not all dress alike, and their number is unlimited. The bride's old nurse superintends the removal of the dowry from the bride's home to that of her future husband and is a most important member on the day of the wedding. A witness—a connection of the family—pays the priest's fees, and a separate duty allotted him, is often considerably great.—Washington Star.

I was in a bookstore the other day, when a woman, who stood beside me, said: "I want that new book, 'Belles Lettres,' which you advertise. I suppose it is a new novel, and I read all the novels as they come out." The attendant tried to explain, but the would-be purchaser scathingly interrupted: "Why have you put it on the list over there, if you haven't got it? But I presume it is for sale farther down the street, where they are up to date." She reminded me of the man who wanted to buy an appendix, thinking that it might replace a part of his anatomy that was out of order.—Saunterer, in Boston Budget.

JUDGMENT.

Go back to the beginning;
Find the cause.
Trace the weakness to its source,
Then dare to pause.

Before you give your judgment
As to sin,
And drive a fellow mortal
Farther in.

For they who fail not always
Have the chance
To live their lives unharmed
By circumstance.

They sometimes do their best,
And if they fail,
Be thou the one to succor;
Never fail.

Blame ever shuts away the Light of day;
Then cheer and bless and comfort
As you may.

Lend them thy strength if of the Strong thou art.
Give of thy love and tenderness
A part.

And never dare to say the Words that kill,
Else thou may sometime feed
The selfsame mill.

The Iron Brigade

A STORY OF THE ARMY
OF THE POTOMAC

Daughter," "Fort Frayne," Etc.

Four o'clock, and still the batteries of Hall and Stewart, with three hard-pounded brigades, hold their ground on the ridge, while the valley behind them is fast filling with Ewell's madly exultant men, driving Howard's beaten divisions before them. To hang on longer is simply madness. Beginning at the right, therefore, stern and silent, the devoted brigades give ground slowly, still facing the foe, still firing low and well. The crush comes as the streams of wounded thicken at the outskirts of the town, merging with the fugitives of the Eleventh corps, and the roads and streets are blocked by batteries, ambulances, stray caissons and ammunition wagons, all in full retreat. The pinch of the fight, the crowning hour of the day, the bloodiest battle of all the 40 hours of thrilling combat, is here on the slope to the north of the seminary, where, from the teeth of the foe, from the midst of their slaughtered horses, the men of the west essay to drag and save their pets, their comrades in every fight and field, the black-mouthed, smoking, heated, still thundering guns of battery "B."

Davis and Daniel—two fighting southern brigadiers they are—riding madly among their powder-stained men; driving them on in the face of those stubborn wild westerners; pointing their swords at the crippled guns, where men are straining at the wheels and slashing at the harness of the slaughtered horses. "Get those guns!" shriek the leaders. "Square accounts for the battle-flags lost in the cut!" But, between the surging rush of Carolina, Mississippi and Georgia, with the supporting Virginians at their back, and that battle-scarred battery limping slowly away down the pike, there still interposes that stern, indomitable, magnificent line in blue—all that is left of the Iron Brigade—as, front to the foe, closing ever on its colors, volleys steadily, defiantly, unflinchingly into the very face of its outnumbering, yet respectful, pursuers, it backs away over the ridge, leaving over a third of its membership strewn in its tracks, another third having already been borne bleeding away toward the town, and so, as the sun goes down on the tremendous day, so, slowly, steadily, wrapped in clouds of its own battle smoke, the eastern brigade descends to the plain, the sixth last to halt in the streets of the town and to cheer to the echo the cause of the flag, while the guns once more unlimber, on the rise of Cemetery Hill, as though daring the foemen to come on and take them. No wonder the Badgers grip hands with the Wolverines, they that remain. Almost 500 of the Michigan men went into the fight by the side of the veterans. Only 100 are left in line when at last the day is done. Fully 300 have been shot down on the field; some few have been captured. In officers alone their dead outnumber those of the rest of the brigade. Of the Black Hat surviving there stand now but 70.

"And they might have cut you off entirely," says Doubleday, as he rides among the remnants, halting along the wooded hillside, east of their rescued guns. "Buford saw, what you couldn't see through the smoke, that two brigades were sweeping down south of the seminary to intercept you. He formed his squadrons to charge. They saw it, by jove! and halted and formed squares to resist him, and that saved you. Capt. Benton. I wish you would ride over and present my compliments and thanks to Gen. Buford. He's just moving off past that stone farm house yonder down in the valley." And so ended the day.

CHAPTER XXV.

LADUE'S LAST RETREAT.

In the two great days that followed there was little to do for the little left of the Iron Brigade. Sore-hearted over the loss of so many cherished comrades, yet confident that their valor had not been vain, the survivors, hung silently to their assigned position, and awaited developments.

And, when the morrow came, Benton was early in saddle and away to the left of the line. He was bitter and chafed in spirit over his wrongs. He realized that under existing conditions nothing more than half-hearted acknowledgment of error could be looked for, but he had determined that the moment things settled down and the department had time to attend to something besides the momentous affairs of the nation, he would demand justice. And now both Wadsworth and Doubleday had spoken in heartiest praise of his behavior throughout that heroic battle of the first day. So far so good. What he longed for, on one hand, was a chance to square accounts with McKinnon. What he hoped for, on another, was opportunity to teach that disdainful girl how deeply she had wronged, as well as affronted, him.

He would have known better had he had time to analyze the chagrin and pain and jealousy which possessed him all the long hours that followed his morning talk with some staff comrades of the Second corps. It seems that three days before, on the 29th of June, while they of the Second were pushing cautiously northward through Maryland, they were made aware that a column of cavalry was passing around them from the south, and that while they were swinging through Uniontown the cavalry were trotting through Westminster, only five miles from their flank. "Gregg's division, of course," said they who saw through glasses the far-distant column. "Gregg, not much!" said Haskell, who had ridden out toward Union Mills on a scout of his own. "It's Jeb Stuart with his whole outfit and not a little of ours. He must have been helping himself every mile of his way from the Potomac." And this, indeed, proved to be the case; for, as they lay in the fields about Uniontown that night, there reached them a rueful, crest-fallen little party of officers, gathered in by Stuart at the crossing of the Baltimore pike. Two were field officers who from convalescent hospital were striving to overtake their regiments; the third was Maj. McKinnon, ordered to report without delay to the commanding general, Army of the Potomac; and McKinnon, it seems, had also been convalescing in Baltimore, but not from wounds. These three, with their light luggage, had been pounced upon at a wayside tavern by a roistering troop of Stuart's flankers and dragged before this cavalry commander. One of the parties presented the three captured officers. Stuart invited his captives to be seated while an aide took their names, regiments, etc., and as McKinnon gave his there was sudden sensation. The young cavalryman sprang forward, seized McKinnon's hand, shook it effusively, and to the amazement of every one present, exclaimed: "Gen. Stuart, I am sure, sir, you will treat this gentleman with every possible consideration. It was he, sir, who so nobly defended my father at Washington when Secretary Stanton would have sent him to Fort Warren—and Rosalie, too, for that matter. It was Maj. McKinnon, sir, who pleaded their cause with the secretary and had them returned to Charlottesville. It was he, sir, who in other ways most generously aided them."

"I am glad to hear it, Jack," said the bearded general, evidently warming toward the westerner who had so befriended his kith and kin. "Of course you're—sure of it?"

"Sure of it, sir?—I had it from father and Rosalie both! They had supposed that they were indebted—or rather that their helper was a very different person, a man whom they had befriended; but that all turned out to be an error." And the upshot of it all was, said Haskell, "that Stuart sent the three to our lines, the two other officers paroled until exchanged, but McKinnon, by Jove, released with Stuart's compliments, and it's my candid belief, damn him, that Mac would a heap rather be in Washington on parole than out here on duty. Shouldn't wonder if Stuart took his measure before he let him slide." Manifestly Haskell didn't fancy McKinnon.

One thing for Benton to ponder over, therefore, was the question how on earth had McKinnon in so short a time been able to persuade that usually clear-sighted girl to the belief that he had used such powerful influence in their behalf.

But there was still another thing to add to his chagrin and perplexity. Col. Kennard, one of the paroled pair, told Haskell all he had seen of Stuart and his devil-may-care command, and much about this young confederate officer—Chilton. "Because," said Kennard, "I heard Chilton say to McKinnon non he was praying that he might yet meet Capt. Benton. There was a union man he'd shoot on sight! And Winston said Amen!" "Now, Fred," said Haskell, as he called for his horse, "I've got to ride the lines and get the reports; but, we've got McKinnon up with the army at last, and soon as we're through with this business we'll nail him." But evidently it was business first in Haskell's eyes.

So Fred Benton had two burning desires as he threaded his way through the swarm of arriving batteries and rode slowly back to Wadsworth; one was to meet McKinnon and brand him as the author of the slanders and the other was in some way to wring from Chilton an explanation of his violent threat. Little did he dream how soon he should be spared the need—and through what sad, strange circumstance.

Between the twilight of the second of July that witnessed Ewell's bloody assault and the dawning of that black Friday of the Lost Cause—the third day—something had happened to give new heart to Jackson's old men. The "Stonewall" brigade was there still in the woods in the low ground between the rocky point, where crouched the survivors of Wadsworth's division, and the forest-covered heights off to the eastward, where cavalry guidons—union cavalry—had been flashing in the last rays of the setting sun. Somewhere in the dim fields there was stir and excitement even in the wearied bivouacs of Ewell; and, under the starlight, eager to satisfy his general's restless desire to know what it all meant, Fred Benton had crept out to the front.

The word has gone the rounds, to the joy of every soldier heart, that the new commander meant to stand and fight, and if Lee could muster no more men than these already thrown in, he might hammer the lines in vain. Now, if only Stuart and his pet brigades would but stay lost, so that no fear need be felt for the far right flank, all would indeed be well!

But would Stuart stay lost? Could he have got so far away as not to be found and by this time returned to the army; and when he came, would it not be from the north, and thus bring him in on the very flank they were now defending? Tired as he was Benton could not sleep for thinking of the disclosures made through Haskell.

Alone and afoot, after a word with his gray-haired chief, he slipped out and away to the Baltimore pike. This he followed southeasterly nearly half a mile, greeted occasionally by low-toned challenge of sentry; but other officers were hurrying swiftly to and fro, and there was little detention. As early as three o'clock he found himself following a patrol down a rocky pathway toward the creek, and, learning from outlying sentry there that no force seemed to be in his immediate front—only a few pickets—Benton explained that he wished to crawl out far enough to be beyond the sound of tramping hoof and rumbling wheel at the pike, that he might listen the better. And, creeping from bush to bush to avoid the moonlit spaces, less than half an hour before dawn he had succeeded in gaining fully 400 yards out toward the northeast, and there low voices warned him to lie still and listen. He was either on or within the confederate picket line, and had much to learn and little time.

And then, as he crouched close to the trunk of a spreading tree, faint and sweet, soft yet stirring, so far out to the north that the performer doubtless thought it beyond the range of inimical ears, a cavalry trumpet began to sound the martial reveille, stirring some nearby watcher to remonstrance. "Damn that infernal dash-dashed idiot," stormed a low, half-choked voice. "He'll tell the whole dash-dashed Yankee army our fellows have come! Go back there, sergeant, and tell our trumpet if he dares to toot a horn I'll murder him."

Then somebody rustled off through the bushes, and somebody else spoke. "Some of Hampton's crowd, I reckon. How long'd the general want us to stay out hyuh?"

"Till Ewell attacks at dawn. Then we'll mount and look out for Gregg. His people are out here to the east of us. Stuart'll get after them, you bet, as soon as it's light."

"We haven't got a horse that can more'n stagger. All worn out, I tell you," protested the second voice.

"No more'n theirs are. Jennings met us back there on the Hanover pike, and I heard him tell Fitz Lee Gregg's horses were all played out—"

"Jennings be damned!" broke in a third voice, impetuously, and Benton started at the sound. It was Chilton's beyond shadow of a doubt. Chilton again with his old regiment, and these with him were doubtless officers of Fitz Lee's brigade, scouting, probably, well in front of the cavalry lines, yet proving that Stuart was there at last, and could be counted on to make things lively in the morning. It was high time to slip back and give warning, but getting back was slow and tedious—even perilous work. The dawn was breaking when, in bedraggled garb, Benton found his gray-headed general in the circle about the commander. Before Benton had time to whisper half his explanation, Wadsworth's tired eyes flamed with eager light.

"Here's the very news to prove it, general!" he cried. "Capt. Benton, of my staff, is just in from that front. Stuart is there and Ewell means to attack—"

"How do you know Stuart is there?" demanded Meade, whirling sharply on the young officer. The most courteous and polished of gentlemen at other times, Meade was irascible in the extreme in battle.

"I heard voices, sir—one that I well knew, an officer of the First Virginia—heard them say that Fitz Lee was there, and that Stuart would settle

Gregg, and that Ewell would attack at dawn—"

But even as he spoke came confirmation of his words. In the dim light of the dawn, the guns of Greene and Geary had suddenly opened on shadowy gray lines, issuing from the opposite woods, and Wadsworth sprang for his horse. But the commander signalled Benton to remain. "You have done a gallant deed, captain, and have brought me most valuable information," were his words a moment later; "It shall not be forgotten."

Yet Benton was surprised late that afternoon when, after the din of the most terrific cannonade ever heard on this continent, and, after daring and determined attack, Pickett, Ewell and Stuart all had been repulsed—Pickett with dreadful loss—there came a message summoning the aide-de-camp to Meade's headquarters. An orderly led him toward a rude wagon-shed beneath which knelt four officers, surrounding a prostrate figure. "He asked for you," said a surgeon, briefly, and one glance at the face of the stricken soldier was enough. Benton threw himself on his knees, and clasped the cold, nerveless hand, feebly lifted to greet him. The falling eyes lighted up one moment in love then closed in agony, as a spasm of torment seized the fragile form. "Paul—Paul—my God!" was all that Benton could murmur, and a surgeon hurriedly brushed before him, and held a little silver cup to the twitching lips of his patient. "Mortal, yes," was his whisper, as the poor lad, exhausted, lay for a moment in a deathlike swoon. Then the stimulant seemed to revive him a bit. The dark eyes slowly opened and fixed on Benton's quivering face. "Bless you, old boy!"—and every whisper seemed to come with a gasp—"I heard—I knew—you'd never give up her letters. A GREAT MEDICINE THEATER AND GIRLS

BRINGS HEALTH TO THREE MEMBERS OF SAME FAMILY.

Cures a Wife's Debility After Malaria, a Husband's Rheumatism, a Daughter's Nervous Prostration.

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to many people," said Mrs. Gossett, "because I have seen such good results, time after time, right in my own family. There are three of us who have no doubt about their merits. We do not need to take anybody's word on the subject for our own experience has taught us how well they deserve praise.

"It was just about ten years ago that I first read about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and bought my first box. I was at that time all run down, weak, nervous and without ambition. I had been doctoring all summer for malaria and stomach trouble. Everybody thought I was going into consumption, as my mother had died of that disease.

"Thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, I am now alive and hearty. I began to improve as soon as I began to take them, and when I had taken three boxes I was a well woman. Everyone wonders how I keep so well and am able to care for my home and six children without help. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills explain it.

"My oldest girl's health began to fail when she was about fourteen. She was nervous, complained of sharp pains in her head, would get deathly sick and have to leave the schoolroom to get fresh air to revive her. I gave some pills to her. She took only a few boxes, but they cured her troubles, and caused her to develop into a perfect picture of health. Then my husband took them for rheumatism and found that they would cure that too. So you see we have all got great good from using them, and that is why we recommend them to others."

Mrs. Minnie B. Gossett lives at Uhrichsville, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, and is well known, as she has resided in the same neighborhood for more than thirteen years. Her story shows that a medicine which makes the blood sound and the nerves strong, overcomes a variety of diseases and should be found in every household. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists everywhere. They have cured anæmia, and all forms of weakness, also the most stubborn cases of dyspepsia and rheumatism. They are indispensable for growing girls.

TEACH THE BOYS THAT

Manners go a long way in helping along in this world. Remember that a gentleman never sits down or remains seated while a lady stands.

When attending an evening entertainment a young girl should be provided with a chaperon. In a narrow passage, hallway or on the stairs, a gentleman always stands aside to let a lady pass.

Letters of introduction are never sealed. It is a courtesy due the bearer that he may know what the letter contains.

A gentleman always has the prefix "Mr." engraved on his visiting card. His business address is never used on such a card.

A gentleman acting as an escort need not present his arm unless the path presents unusual obstacles or the lady is elderly or an invalid.

The dinner napkin is partially unfolded and placed across the knees. At the close of the meal it is placed unfolded by the side of the plate.

A Monster Egg.

The egg of the aepornis, which is now in the United States National Museum, is probably the largest egg in existence. It is 12 inches long and ten inches wide, and its shell is nearly a quarter of an inch thick, and as hard as a rock. Some idea of its size may perhaps be had when it is stated that it is capable of holding the contents of six ostrich eggs, or 148 hens' eggs, or 30,000 humming birds' eggs.

CHILDREN AFFECTED

By Mother's Food and Drink.

Many babies have been launched into life with constitutions weakened by disease taken in with their mother's milk. Mothers cannot be too careful as to the food they use while nursing their babies. The experience of a Kansas City mother is a case in point: "I was a great coffee drinker from a child, and thought I could not eat a meal without it. But I found at last it was doing me harm. For years I had been troubled with dizziness, spots before my eyes and pain in my heart, to which was added, two years ago, a chronic sour stomach. The baby was born 7 months ago, and almost from the beginning, it too, suffered from sour stomach. She was taking it from me!

"In my distress I consulted a friend of more experience than mine, and she told me to quit coffee, that coffee did not make good milk. I have since ascertained that it really dries up the milk. "So, I quit coffee, and tried tea and at last cocoa. But they did not agree with me. Then I turned to Postum Coffee with the happiest results. It proved to be the very thing I needed. It not only agreed perfectly with baby and myself, but it increased the flow of my milk. My husband then quit coffee and used Postum, quickly got well of the dyspepsia with which he had been troubled. I no longer suffer from the dizziness, blind spells, pain in my heart or sour stomach. Postum has cured them.

"I will drink Postum, from my seven-months-old baby to the babe in the womb."

The "Matinee Girl" and Her Characteristics — Great Educational Force of the Theater—Influence of Actresses on Dress, Etc. — Some Dangers—Possible Remedies.

BY KATE UPSON CLARK.
(Author of "Bringing Up Boys," etc.; president of the Wheaton Club, New York.)

(Copyright, 1904, by Joseph B. Bowles.) There is in a certain city a large theater, in which a good class of plays is always presented by a fairly competent stock company, and yet the prices are low. Box seats are only 50 cents, and the best orchestra and "dress circle" seats cost but a quarter. Admission to the gallery is but ten cents.

Of course, every city has its cheap theaters, but at most of these plays of dubious morality are likely to be given, and the actors make no pretensions to artistic attainments. The decent cheap theater is a comparatively new innovation.

Anyone who will take the trouble to attend a matinee at the large theater which has been mentioned, will be appalled at the number of children who are there. More than half of the audience is made up of them, and they are apparently from the respectable classes of society—well-dressed, fairly well behaved, and nearly all of them having the air as they enter of being very much used to the place.

Listen to the conversation, and you will hear many bits like this:

"Do you like 'A Pigeon's Flight,' as well as 'The Foreign Marriage?'" (This from a little girl of 10 or 11.)

"Oh, my, no! Do you?"—from her companion of the same age.

"Mercy, no! That pink dress, with the diamonds—wasn't it great! I do think Miss Pell (the star) is awfully pretty, don't you?"

"I don't think she is so pretty as Lena Frank (the soubrette), and her waist ain't anything near so small. 'Most everybody likes Lena Frank the best. And ain't Raymond Tower (the leading man) handsome? When I grow up, I'm going to marry somebody just like him. Oh, I wish I could come every day, don't you?"

"Yes, but mother won't let me come only just Saturdays. It wouldn't hurt me a bit to come two or three nights a week. My sister Annie comes 'most every night, and she comes to a matinee whenever there is a new play. Sometimes she sees the same play over four or five times. She is always falling in love with one of the actors, and writing notes to them—" and so on.

In somewhat more sophisticated circles, the "matinee girl" has long been a familiar figure. The false ideals, the stilted phrases, the artificial "make-up" of the stage has had much to do with the molding of the modern fashionable maiden. But now all classes seem to have been claimed by this fascinating despot. The educational force of the theater has probably doubled during the past 20 years—and it is especially exerted upon our girls, who are apparently in large measure deriving their ideals and molding their ambitions upon dramatic representations of "popular" plays.

It is well known that modes of dress are very largely controlled by actresses. It is rumored that enormous sums have been paid by merchants to certain favorite "stars" for wearing in certain scenes some new style of hat or wrap. Their indorsement of various new materials and highly injurious articles of underwear, may be read by the score in the advertising pages of magazines and on the bulletin boards along the streets.

Thus it may almost be said that the actress rules absolutely many phases of our social and domestic life, while the actor furnishes the model for the dreams and aspirations of an enormous section of our budding maidens.

Now, while it may be true, as some authorities claim, that the ideals of the stage are constantly becoming more natural, and, on the whole, more moral, are we quite prepared to have our national life molded upon the ideals furnished by the theater?

Think of the millions of unformed girls who are trying to shape their poor little figures (what a preparation for the motherhood to which, in a vague way, they all of them also aspire!) after the "Lena Franks" of the stage. Think of the shop-girls who spend all their money in silly attempts to copy the "pink dress, with the diamonds." Think of the sort of man they set up to worship—and of the hard luck of the love-lorn grocer-boys and plumbers' assistants who have to compete with this stage-made hero.

As for the lower class of playhouses, which number hundreds throughout the length and breadth of the land, the poison which they spread is acknowledged. Even in places where a "stage censorship" has been attempted, the situation has not been much improved. It is asserted by those who have studied the subject that a large percentage of the vice among our boys and girls—some place it as high as half—is directly due to the influence of the low vaudeville shows in the slums. The influence of a bad picture is rated as twice that of a bad book. The influence of a bad picture is doubled if it is "bio-graphed," and the influence of the bad photograph picture is doubled if the thought is expressed in a dramatic way, with all its accessories of lights, fire and flesh and blood.

Well, you ask, what is going to be done about it? It is almost impossible to secure any sort of efficient censorship over such places. Even in the 'first-class' houses, plays are constantly appearing which contain immodest scenes. On the other hand, parts are taken by actors whose scandalous lives are often exploited in the daily press. Thus it comes to seem quite natural and proper that a man should be so charming and courteous as to be receivable in any society, and yet should figure constantly in the divorce courts, or in the police 'blotters.' And the chief sufferers from these examples in character and moral standards are the very young. Yet we know that the theater has come to stay."

The question forms one more for the girls' and women's clubs to discuss. As Joe Jefferson said to the Yale students: "It would be decidedly better for the stage if more plays were put on to which the matinee girl could with propriety take her mother." The situation was well summed up by our witty Mr. Dooley when he told Mr. Hennessy that "nowadays the hero is more of a villain than the villain himself." There is truth under the wit—and the troops of silly girls who flock to the matinees get the heroism and the villainy so badly mixed that their whole lives are undetermined by their false notions.

One commentator singles out the two recently popular plays of "Magda" and "The Dancing Girl" as examples of the sort that do untold harm. From the strictness and tyranny of a Puritanical home, in each of these, a girl of spirit and gifts determines to free herself. She accordingly rushes right to ruin, as though that were the only alternative. And this is made to seem logical and almost admirable, although in each case, again, there is a broken-hearted father.

There seem to be three things to be done. First, don't let the girls go so much to the theater. Second, try to devise means of making plays better and also the lives of actors and actresses better. Third, get up something else that is interesting for the boys and girls on Saturday afternoon.

SECRETS OF DIVINING ROD

"Water Witch" Explains Weird Influence by Which Subterranean Waters Are Located.

In a recent issue of the Record-Herald I noticed an article on "The Dowser as a Living Issue." After reading it I am unable to decide whether the writer aimed to invite discussion or to make sport of the matter, writes L. Armstrong, of New Providence, Ia., to the Chicago Record-Herald.

It may interest some of your readers to know of my experience with the divining rod and what I have learned about it. I am not a professional dowser, but, finding that the rod would operate in my hands, I have experimented quite a little with it for my own amusement and for the entertainment of guests.

I was about 26 years old when I first discovered that I was a "water witch." At first the rod worked quite feebly for me, but did better as I grew older, until now at the age of 68 it works quite strongly.

I use a straight rod, which I hold in both hands at an angle of about 45 degrees, the outer or loose end being the higher.

It is generally thought that only a witch hazel or a limb of some fruit bearing tree will operate, but I find any kind of wood will do as well; in fact, a buggy whip works nicely.

By "works" or "operates" I mean that the rod vibrates up and down when held over an object, or right and left when held between two neighboring places or objects.

I find that there are places in the ground over which the rod will operate and places where it will not. The places over which it operates are of indefinite length and quite narrow, and may be traced by means of the rod to intersections with other like places. These places are the so-called water veins. The number of times the rod vibrates over them is supposed to indicate their depth in feet below the surface of the ground. Having never proved this matter, I cannot tell whether there is water below or not. I only know that the rod operates as stated. I found that if I crossed one of these veins and did not stop the rod would turn until it pointed toward the vein, and that it invariably turned to the left.

The rod will operate over the heads or limbs of some persons and over some animals. It will not operate over red-headed persons. It seldom operates over light hair. It will operate over most dark-haired persons. If it operates over one's head it will not operate in his hands. If held over one it vibrates, up and down; if between two persons, it works right and left. It will work over the left foot or leg, but will not over the right foot or leg.

It will vibrate more times over an old than a young person. It will vibrate a certain number of times and stop; then if the operator moves his feet it will again vibrate the same number of times and stop.

If the operator stands on glass the rod will not operate. Does not this last indicate a possible solution of the whole matter? Some electrician should investigate and report.

Facts About Food.

German scientists announce that everything needed to make a man weigh 150 pounds can be found in the whites and yolks of 1,200 hen's eggs. Reduced to a fluid, the average man would yield 98 cubic meters of illuminating gas, and hydrogen enough to fill a balloon capable of lifting 155 pounds. The normal human body has in it the iron needed to make seven large nails, the fat for 14 pounds of candles, the carbon for 63 gross of crayons, and phosphorus enough for 820,000 matches. Out of it can be obtained besides 20 coffee spoons of salt 50 lumps of sugar and 42 liters of water.

IN RELIGIOUS FIELDS.

Rev. Dr. Shadrach L. Bowman, of Newark, N. J., has just celebrated his half century in the ministry.

Four Chinese of Baltimore have announced their intention of becoming members of the Catholic church.

There are 17 Queen Esther circles in Rock River conference, and the prospect is that there soon will be several more.

The bishop of Durham thinks that it is no foolish emotionalism which causes some of the Welsh converts to take their old fathers out of the work-houses and give them a home.

Rev. Stephen Gladstone, recently inducted into the rectory of Barrowby, Lincolnshire, England, inherits his father's command of language. Like "the great commoner," too, he believes in simple, reverent and dignified services.

The late Bishop McLaren was a newspaper reporter in Pittsburgh previous to studying for the ministry. It was while reporting the proceedings of a religious convention that he got his inspiration to study for a church career.

Who Owns the Railroads?

H. T. Newcomb, of the District of Columbia Bar, has compiled statistics showing that 5,174,718 depositors in savings banks of six eastern states are directly interested in the joint ownership of $142,354,086 of steam railroad securities, that insurance companies doing business in Massachusetts hold $545,859,038 of steam railroad stocks and bonds, and 74 educational institutions depend on $47,468,327 invested in similar securities for a portion of their income. Other fiduciary institutions own enough railroad securities to bring such holdings up to more than a billion and a half dollars, about one-sixth of the entire capital invested in railroad property. These investments represent the savings of the masses, there being twenty million holders of life insurance policies in the country, as many more of fire insurance policies, and an even greater number of depositors in banking and trust institutions, where investments are largely in railroad securities.

Speaking of investments, what brings greater returns than a word of cheer spoken at the right time?—The Commonwealth.

Errors of Modern Life.

Modern enjoyments, the modern way of living and working, overtax the nerves and they are sure to give way sooner or later—according to their resisting power—but invariably "sometime" the penalty will come, there is a limit to nerve endurance.

For Weakness or General Debility Pusheck's Kuro is unexcelled.

It creates appetite, stimulates the heart, purifies and enriches the blood and imparts vitality to every nerve and organ. Pusheck's Kuro prevents weakness from slight exertion, removes that tired, worn-out feeling, that nervous high tension, nervous headaches, nervous excitement, restores vigor and health to all who suffer from any debility, overwork, great strain, general prostration, or even collapse. It produces strong, healthy nerves and also aids recovery after long spells of sickness. It is the greatest tonic and cure ever discovered. Do not wait until it is too late. Take Pusheck's Kuro at once and you will feel better. It is a temporary improvement. It is a permanent cure.

If your druggist hasn't Pusheck's Kuro take nothing else, but mail $1 to Dr. Pusheck, 192 Washington St., Chicago, and Pusheck's Kuro will be sent by mail. Write at once for illustrated booklet, etc.

Truths that Strike Home

Your grocer is honest and—if he cares to do so—can tell you that he knows very little about the bulk coffee he sells you. How can he know, where it originally came from, how it was blended—or with what—or when roasted? If you buy your coffee loose by the pound, how can you expect purity and uniform quality?

LION COFFEE, the LEADER OF ALL PACKAGE COFFEES, is of necessity uniform in quality, strength and flavor. For OVER A QUARTER OF A CENTURY, LION COFFEE has been the standard coffee in millions of homes.

LION COFFEE is carefully packed at our factories, and until opened in your home, has no chance of being adulterated, or of coming in contact with dust, dirt, germs, or unclean hands.

In each package of LION COFFEE you get one full pound of Pure Coffee. Insist upon getting the genuine. (Lion head on every package.)

(Save the Lion-heads for valuable premiums.)

THE STRAIN OF WORK.

Best of Backs Give Out Under the Burden of Daily Toil.

Lieutenant George G. Warren, of No. 3 Chemical, Washington, D. C., says: "It's an honest fact that Doan's Kidney Pills did me a great lot of good, and if it were not true I would not recommend them. It was the strain of lifting that brought on kidney trouble and weakened my back, but since using Doan's Kidney Pills I have lifted 600 pounds and felt no bad effects. I have not felt the trouble come back since, although I had suffered for five or six years, and other remedies had not helped me at all."

A Paris Girl's Success.

Miss Jennie Hanson, the only daughter of the late Hon. Richard Hanson, of Paris, since moving to Lexington has become one of the leading business women of the country. She first taught in the Lexington city schools until her magazine agency developed into such proportions as to take up all of her time. On Tuesday she bought the old Lexington Library Building, which adjoins her home, for $8,000. This building will be used exclusively for her magazine agency, which is one of the largest in the United States. Miss Hanson only a few weeks ago purchased the old Sayre homestead in Lexington for $12,000, and some time ago purchased a large hotel building in Chicago. We were informed by one who should know, that Miss Hanson has made in the last few years, by her own exertions and business tact, near $100,000. She has many friends here who wish that the deserved success of this bright young woman may continue through many years.

The Hog Was Not to Blame.

Because a hog kicked a knife out of a butcher's hand and cut the butcher's foot, Wm. Weigan sued the Kentucky Provision and Packing Co., of Louisville, for $5,500, and Judge Fields decided that "the hog, when he realized the seriousness of his position, was not to blame for kicking the knife out of the plaintiff's hand." And this is why the petition was dismissed.
